The Department posted a call for one assistant professor, with an application deadline on 18 June 2015. We received 32 valid applications. Each application was evaluated by the hiring committee:

We selected Salvatore Nunnari. Salvatore is a promising political economist with strong experimental, theoretical, and empirical skills. Salvatore has PhD from Caltech and is currently Assistant Professor of Political Science at Columbia University. The committee evaluated favorably the research and prospects of this candidate as well as the fit with the needs of the department.

None of the other 31 candidates met the department's criteria in terms of research productivity.

In the end, the department enthusiastically decided to offer a position to Salvatore Nunnari. The offer was accepted.

We therefore request to close this call with the position filled.

Sincerely,
